Text Messages

Max just received a message. Thinking back over the story so far, explain which other character just sent a message to him and what is the content of this conversation. As we are writing in speech bubbles, you do not need to use speech punctuation, but you do need to think about what you know about Max and the story so far. You can print this off, or I would suggest just drawing speech bubbles into your book. I have written a couple of examples to get you started if you need them.

Massimo, your father and I have boarded the plane, well, a very small plane. Please remember not to stay up too late and make sure you eat enough. Zia's tamales are still in the fridge. I love you, Mom x

Now that you're not here I can stay up as late as I want and if you think I'm eating Zia's tamales you're crazy!

Come home soon Mom.

I love you too Mom x
